

Interpretive Notice & Formal Opinion (“INFO”) # 5:

Public Health Emergency Whistleblower (“PHEW”) Law

Overview

This INFO covers rights and responsibilities under Colorado’s public health emergency whistleblower law (HB 20-1415, July 11, 2020) (“PHEW”).

Workers and Entities Covered

Most Colorado labor laws cover only “employers” and “employees,” but PHEW covers any “worker” (not just “employees”) for any “principal” (not just “employers”):

- Covered “principals” are: (A) “employers,” as defined in existing Colorado wage law (C.R.S. 8-4-101(6)); (B) any “entity that contracts with five or more independent contractors in the state each year”; and (C) state and local government employers (but not the federal government). (C.R.S. 8-14.4-101(3).)
- Covered “workers” are: (A) “employees,” as defined in existing Colorado wage law (C.R.S. 8-4-101(5)); and (B) any person “who works for an entity that contracts with five or more independent contractors in the state each year.” (C.R.S. 8-14.4-101(5).)

Worker concerns, opposition, and participation that are protected

A principal cannot retaliate against, or interfere with, the following worker activities (C.R.S. 8-14.4-102(1),(4)):

- Concerns: raising a “reasonable concern about workplace violations of government health or safety rules, or about an otherwise significant workplace threat to health or safety, related to a public health emergency.”
- Opposition: “opposing any practice the worker reasonably believes is unlawful” under PHEW.
- Participation: “making a charge, testifying, assisting, or participating in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or hearing as to any matter the worker reasonably believes to be unlawful” under PHEW.

Those protections come with the following limits and conditions.

- Public health emergency: Protection applies only to activities related to either (A) “a public health order issued by a state or local public health agency” or (B) “a disaster emergency declared by the governor based on a public health concern.” (C.R.S. 8-14.4-101(4).)
- Reasonableness: Workers are protected even if they are incorrect about a claimed violation, if their belief was “reasonable” and in “good faith.” Workers are not protected for communications (A) that are “knowingly false,” or are made “with reckless disregard for the truth or falsity of the information,” or (B) that “share individual health information that is otherwise prohibited from disclosure” by state or federal law. (C.R.S. 8-14.4-102(5)-(6).)
- Principal is not required to agree with, or act on, incorrect concerns: If a worker’s concern is reasonable but incorrect, the principal is not required to agree with it, or to take any action the worker requests. It just cannot fire or otherwise act against the worker for raising that concern (for example, with a demotion, discipline, a cut in pay or hours, or an undesired transfer or shift change).
- Principal control, and communication to others: Where the protected activity is raising a “concern” (rather than opposition or participation), it is protected (A) only if made to “to the principal, the principal’s agent, other workers, a government agency, or the public,” and (B) only as to a principal that “controls the workplace conditions giving rise to the threat or violation.” (C.R.S. 8-14.4-102(1).)

Worker Use of Personal Protective Equipment That is Protected

A principal must allow, and cannot act against a worker for, “voluntarily wearing at the worker's workplace the worker's own personal protective equipment, such as a mask, faceguard, or gloves” (“PPE”) -- with these limits and conditions on the PPE that the worker has a right to wear (C.R.S. 8-14.4-102(3)):

- only PPE that “provides a higher level of protection than the equipment provided by the principal”;
- only PPE that “is recommended by a federal, state, or local public health agency with jurisdiction over the worker's workplace”; and
- only PPE that “does not render the worker incapable of performing the worker's job or prevent a worker from fulfilling the duties of the worker's position.”

Non-Disclosure Agreements Restricting Protected Activity Are Unlawful And Unenforceable

A principal may have otherwise valid agreements or policies requiring non-disclosure or confidentiality, but under PHEW, a principal “shall not require or attempt to require”:

- an agreement that “would limit or prevent the worker from disclosing information about workplace health and safety practices or hazards related to a public health emergency”; or
- a “workplace policy that would limit or prevent such disclosures.”

Under PHEW, any such provisions are “void and unenforceable as contrary to the public policy of this state,” and a principal's “attempt to impose” one “is an adverse action in violation” of PHEW. (C.R.S. 8-14.4-102(2).)

Worker Complaint Rights

A worker can file a complaint of retaliation or interference with PHEW rights with the Division, but cannot file a lawsuit in court without first filing with the Division. Unlike laws requiring the Division to investigate all unpaid wage claims: PHEW and other laws don't require the Division to investigate all retaliation or interference claims. After receiving a retaliation or interference complaint, the Division will review it, and may preliminarily investigate it, to decide whether to fully investigate, in light of the Division's resources and other workload.

- If the Division decides to fully investigate a complaint, it will do so with notification to all parties.
- If the Division decides not to fully investigate a complaint, it will inform the worker of the decision, which serves to “authorize” the worker to pursue a lawsuit in court.

If the worker proves unlawful retaliation or interference (after a Division investigation, or in a lawsuit), then depending on how it affected the worker, the principal may be ordered to pay the worker any lost pay (if a firing, cut in pay or hours, etc., is found to be a violation), to reinstate the worker (if the violation cost the worker their job), and/or to pay fines or penalties that statutes authorize for non-compliance. A lawsuit in court may provide the worker additional damages as well. (C.R.S. 8-14.4-105, 106.)

Posting Duties of Principals

PHEW requires principals to “post notice of a worker's rights” under PHEW “in a conspicuous location on the principal's premises” consistent with Division rules on “the form of the notice” and other rules “to implement” PHEW. (C.R.S. 8-14.4-103, 108.) The Division's poster is available, and before providing notices or postings, check the Division INFO page for the latest INFO and poster versions.
